

Many college students struggle to work effectively on group projects because it's hard to find time to meet, divide tasks fairly, and maintain consistent communication among team members. This problem often happens in larger or online classes where students don't know each other well and as a result can have trouble staying organized or communicating clearly with each other which can make group projects feel stressful, unbalanced, and less productive than they should be.